MuirMcNeil Ubu is a geometric type collection drawn in four versions, Ubu Bloc, Ubu Trou, Ubu Coup and Ubu Doux. The typeface is named after Ubu Roi, an anarchic satire written by Alfred Jarry in 1896.

In the Ubu Bloc type, all of the glyphs are solid geometric forms. A system of rudimentary counter forms is inserted into the same contours in Ubu Trou, while in Ubu Coup, characters are split into their modular sub-components. Ubu Doux is a softer variant where all inner junctions and intersections have been gently curved.

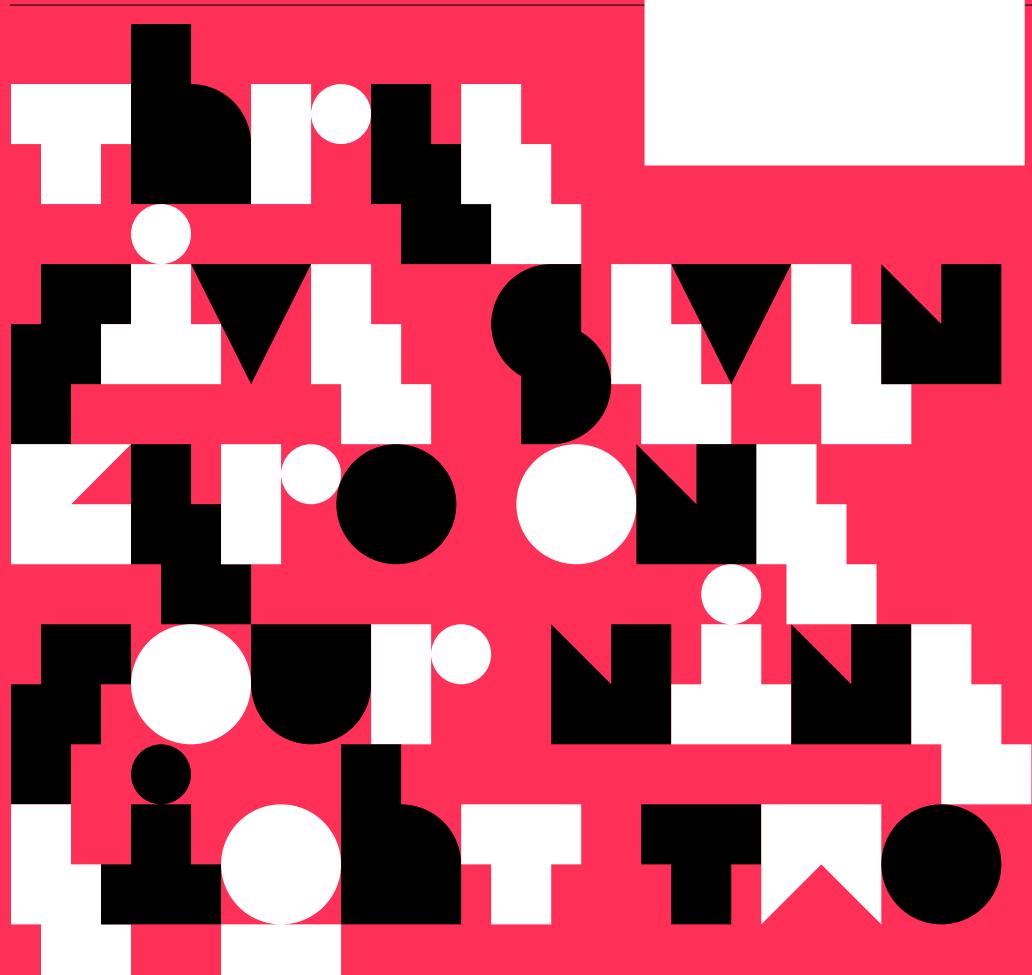

Each version has been cut in three styles. In the heaviest, Gros, all glyphs butt against each other seamlessly so that words form solid objects, while in the negative and positive versions, Noir and Blanc, characters are separated by hairline spaces or hairline rules. Spacing and kerning are variable although body widths are common to all Ubu styles so that they can combine with one another and can correspond in interlocking layers.
